Class work.

Class work is defined as student work that is required to be completed within the classroom. Participation in class activities and class assignments are important to informally assess student learning and understanding. All students are expected to participate in class. Participating in note-taking is a part of the class room experience. Students are expected to take notes in their notebook/notebook paper. The notes can be used on quizzes only if kept safe.

Quizzes and Tests

There will be quizzes during each unit, a unit test at the end of each unit, chapter test at the end of each chapter. Quizzes are not as rigorous as tests, but still require studying. Students will be given advance notice for all quizzes and tests. There will be study guides for all tests.

Projects / Presentations:

Students will be given projects periodically throughout the trimester. They will receive information on these projects as the date arises. Students will be given ample time to complete projects and in some cases, extra class time. Students will be graded on a rubric, which will communicate the expectation of the project and assess specific criteria of the assignment.

Home work:

Students will receive homework every day to enforce key math concepts. Students are expected to complete and turn in all homework in a timely manner. Homework is usually due the next day. In most cases, homework will be graded on effort and completion.

Late Homework:

1. Full credit will be given for assignments turned in on the due date.
2. Homework will receive 10% off per day every day that is late for one week.
3. Assignments will not be accepted for a grade after the first week of the original due date.
